What that mean

Ethan V @ItsEmbazz · Nov 10
Replying to @SoleRetriever
For everyone confused, what they tried to say is they are not putting the tags under shoes because it is something StockX created and is presumably already embedded in their platform. Not putting the tag is because brands do not advertise their shoes as stockX verified, etc.

Ethan V @ItsEmbazz · Nov 10
Replying to @ItsEmbazz and @SoleRetriever
So basically it's a safety net for them if they do ship fakes because you bought something that does have 100% verified from direct retailers, but individuals who sell on stockX. Makes sense?

Shibuyen Zen @KingKaffeJoe · Nov 10

Yup they have their own authentication process, but that doesn't mean they have to provide, just like eBay until they introduced theirs.

removing 100% Authentic doesn't change anything other than the words being removed, they still use a similar if not the same verification process as their competitors

Wade @_oneWade · Nov 11
Replying to @savill_adam and @SoleRetriever
If they have removed it from the site completely, then it makes a HUGE difference. The 100% Authentic means you have legal recourse if you receive non-authentic sneakers. Without it then you're probably up shit creek!

Adam @savill_adam · Nov 11
Replying to @_oneWade and @SoleRetriever
if you check their competitors i don't think they state that products are 100% authentic either tbh but it's still a safer way to buy sneakers aftermarket
